MEMORANDUM FOR: Director of Central Intelligence

SUBJECT: Status Report on Collection Requirements

The IG Survey of Foreign Intelligence Collection Requirements was completed by the [] task force in December 1966. The Senior Executives Group worked over the recommendations in the Survey from March through July 1967. In July 1967 and in January 1968 I reported in detail to you on the actions being taken to improve the content, organizational mechanisms and procedures of collection requirements.

I have recently had [] do a follow-up check on how things stand as of now. What follows is his report which is intended to characterize the current status of the requirements business and to identify major achievements and deficiencies against the background of the [] Report.

General Picture: If [] and the task force were to retrace their steps over the route followed in the collection requirements survey, they would find a more pleasing picture. The IG Survey described the requirements process as suffering from a good deal of neglect by collectors, analysts and management, working relationships in some cases pretty rusty, and procedures in need of tidying and tightening. It would be a gross error to say that all of these deficiencies have been corrected, but considerable progress has been made and in the process we have all become a bit more sophisticated about the role of collection requirements.

Highlights of Progress (not in order of importance):

--The PNIOs were revised by CIA and approved by USIB in May 1968. It may be illusion to expect a near perfect set of PNIOs or that they will have great utility for program planning, but the present set are better than the ones they replaced.

--The old Collection Guidance Staff has become the Intelligence Requirements Staff. In retrospect this is more of a name change than a change of functions, but IRS now serves the DDS&T in the same way as it acts as staff to the DDI (which CGS did not).

--The new Information Requirements Advisory Group (IRAG) under Ed Proctor has brought the deputy chiefs of the substantive intelligence components into the requirements process instead of letting the analysts go their merry way. The involvement of managers is one of the critical elements in the requirements process. The record to date appears to be a spotty one; many officers take requirements seriously but a few still do not.

--Communication concerning requirements has improved. There is an increase in consultations between the analyst and a CS officer before levying a requirement. Much-needed communication between FI Staff, on the one hand, and IRAG and IRS on the other has developed. Both FI and IRS attest to this.

--The number of standing CIA requirements in the "human source" field [] has dropped some. The content of many requirements levied by CIA production offices has improved substantially as a result of better procedures and validation by supervisory echelons of the need and import of that which the analyst desires.

--Work is proceeding on cutting down [] covering 64 Free World countries as a result of the BALPA exercise. A meeting of [] was held in July for the first time in over four years. FI Staff reports that [] plans to work on updating its charter this fall.

--The expansion of COMOR into COMIREX with the added function of photographic exploitation requirements has laid the basis for getting a better handle on exploitation. COMIREX continues to work on tightening of requirements in order to reduce the number of KH-4 [] launches. The reduction for FY1969 is an impressive saving. Much remains to be done before the JIIRC recommendations will be realized, but progress is being made on this front. (A review of this in early 1969 might be fruitful.)

--The establishment of SORS under [redacted] chairmanship appears to have been a good move. [redacted]

Still to be done:

--Redefinition of the purpose and revision of the content of the Current Intelligence Requirements List (CIRL) has been delayed. Some experimental work on CIRL has begun. IRAG has not moved as quickly as it might on this recommendation, partly perhaps because Ed Proctor and IRAG members have been busy on higher priority work.

--Some actions still remain to be fully implemented. These include work on the content and function of [redacted] The real impact of [redacted] on CS collection remains questionable. The Survey's recommendation on collection guidance [] has not been carried out, although [] it has become better. Validation by the DDI and DD6&T of the judgments which go into the DDP's gaps and guidance studies is still missing, but that one is relatively minor.

Recommendation: That no new action be taken at this point but that we monitor the process and take a fresh look at the end of 1968. We might consider having [] one of the original task force members spend a week doing a quick re-survey in order to get a more objective reading.
